DENVER SEMINARY

Alumni Connection

March, 2019

We recently celebrated our inaugural Blacks in Theology week. The purpose of this week was to listen carefully to the voices of black theologians, pastors, and leaders. Each of us was challenged to carefully consider how their voices enrich our understanding of God, His Church, and His mission in the world.

The week culminated with a gala celebration at Restoration Christian Fellowship. During this week we also established an endowed scholarship for black students.

I believe this was one of the most important events we've ever held at Denver Seminary. We need to listen carefully to those whose faith, worship, and theology have been shaped through exclusion, discrimination, oppression, and suffering. Their voices call for honest reflection on the pernicious presence of racism in our nation and its enduring legacy in our churches and theologies. We have a long way to go and the path will not be easy, but it is the right path.

Blacks in Theology was the brainchild of Dr. Felix Gilbert, Director of Denver Seminary's Urban Initiatives. Under his leadership the Seminary is pursuing three goals: (1) expand the number of black students, (2) enhance the black student experience at Denver Seminary, and (3) extend Denver Seminary programs to students in urban churches. Dr. Gilbert's leadership has been very effective in helping us make progress on all three goals.

An Interview with Felix Gilbert, DMin

What inspired the vision of Blacks in Theology Week?

There were several points of inspiration for Blacks in Theology Week. The first was the many celebrations that occur during Black History Month. The second inspiration was recognizing a gap in theological education. Little, if any, focus has been placed on the perspectives and ideas both black theologians and black lay people have contributed to theology. I saw an opportunity to expand the scope of what we celebrate during Black History Month as well as shed light on a gap in theological education. It is through these lenses that the name and idea “Blacks in Theology Week” was birthed.

The name is intended to emphasize Denver Seminary's intentional recognition of the legacy of blacks who have made contributions and sacrifices to make theological education possible, acknowledge those who are currently shaping culture, and to express our desire to strengthen and engage with black communities in the future.

What were your hopes for the week?

The hope for the week was to emphasize the truth that Denver Seminary cares deeply for, is committed to, and is investing in the black community. The intent was to: (1) Publicly demonstrate that Denver Seminary is taking intentional steps to create a welcoming community for blacks and minority students. (2) Emphasize the truth that embracing black communities is vital to the health of the Seminary and to the communities it serves. (3) Communicate the truth that it is the Seminary's responsibility to address the barriers that weaken its growth and to build and repair relationships with black communities.

What was the outcome of the week?

The week was filled with presentations, live musical performances, discussion groups, personal stories, and celebration. The week culminated on Friday, February 8, 2019, with an evening gala held at Restoration Christian Fellowship's Event Center. The focus of the gala was to raise dollars to fund the Black Student Fellowship Endowed Scholarship. The intent of the scholarship is to make seminary education more accessible and affordable to black students. The attendance at the gala surpassed all expectations as the black community showed up in record numbers and demonstrated to Denver Seminary both their appreciation for taking the initiative to bridge the divide, and for partnering with the community in funding the Black Student Fellowship Endowed Scholarship. That evening, the audience of black pastors, business leaders, and community residents committed over $60,000 toward the scholarship.

What were you most encouraged by during the week?

There were three encouraging and inspiring encounters from the week that stand out. The primary one was the support received from Denver Seminary's community in planning and executing the week of Blacks in Theology. Second, the response of the community with their presence at all the events of the week, specifically filling the auditorium for the gala, was deeply moving. Third was Denver Seminary's commitment to provide matching contributions up to $100,000. That announcement by Denver Seminary's President, Dr. Mark Young, was the loudest voice that spoke to the black community that week. As the saying goes, "action speaks louder than words." The Seminary's financial commitment to the Black Student Fellowship Endowed Scholarship said to the black community, Denver Seminary is serious about partnering with, creating space for, and valuing the voices of the black community.

The week's events included a special presentation of At the Table with Dr. King, which is a show performed by professionals from More than Music. At the Table with Dr. King is a multifaceted, live performance that teaches the audience about the American Civil Rights movement as well as valuable lessons of equality and respect. Through music, poetry, historical video footage, and Dr. King's own words, At the Table also challenges its audience to engage in creative acts of service and leadership in their communities.

Making the evening even more memorable was the participation of Dr. Felix Gilbert playing the base and the involvement of Denver Seminary Alumnus Ayinde Russell (class of 2006), who is a regular member of the group. We followed up with Ayinde to ask about his experience performing at his alma mater.

Can you describe your experience performing with At the Table at your alma mater during Blacks in Theology Week? What did this performance mean to you?

It reconnected me with how the gospel is a foundation for every redemptive act God performs. It's all been covered through the work of Christ and can be accessed through Him. Jesus elevates any discussion of human dignity, justice, and mercy. He models humility and accountability, both so critical in conversations about racial reconciliation and social justice.

If you could give a word of wisdom to the Denver Seminary student body, what would you say?

Risk the hard conversations that could illuminate the blind spots in your own heart for Christ's transformative work. Risk the interactions that expose the hardened areas in your heart for the Lord to soften.

If you could give a word of wisdom to the current Denver Seminary staff and faculty, what would you say?

Thank you for every effort you make to be vulnerable learners yourselves while leading instruction in God's Word to an increasingly diverse audience.

Alumni Life & Ministry Updates

Ray Pountney,
class of 1986

Judy and I are pastoring a 187 year old church in London which was started by C.H Spurgeon back in the day. Who would have said we would be called from Zimbabwe to lead a church in central London when we were dealing with Church History exams and Dr. Burdick's Greek class? But here we are only by God's amazing grace and design. And we are here with Dr. Mike Burgess, also a Denver Seminary man, running East Hill Baptist Bible College with Church History in Plain Language and Biblical Preaching as our two key text books. Denver Seminary really was a brilliant foundation for us all. We give thanks.

Tony Brittin, class of 1980

I retired in June of 2017 from the senior pastor role of the church plant that began in 1995. We prefer to call this season of our life "redeployment". We have been ministering in a small church in San Luis, Mexico, on a monthly basis - preaching, training leaders, and encouraging the pastor and his family.

Clay Clarkson, class of 1985

In 2019, Sally and I will mark twenty-five years of full-time ministry to Christian parents and families through Whole Heart Ministries (wholeheart.org). After our first 12 years as a new couple--seminary (MDiv, 1985), missions, and church pastoral ministry--we jumped off a cliff of faith in 1994 to start our family ministry from a 70-year-old farmhouse in rural Texas with no idea where it would take us. After twenty years of over 60 hotel conferences for moms, a national children's book catalog, countless church events in the US and around the world, over two dozen books for parents and families, and numerous other online and offline ministry initiatives, we're still encouraging and equipping Christian parents to raise wholehearted children for Christ. It's mostly always been just the two of us, with help from our four children and some great friends and volunteers. We're both officially seniors now, and though we may slow down after this year, we plan to keep doing this ministry of "keeping faith in the family" as long as God allows.

Free Online Courses

Unlocking the Parables of Jesus, taught by Dr. Craig Blomberg

At Denver Seminary, our intention is to graduate life-long learners. We hope these online courses offer a way to refresh and revisit areas of study that can greatly influence your faith journey. We also want to encourage you to share these with your friends and family or to use them as teaching tools in your church or ministry context.

“Unlocking the Parables of Jesus,” begins by discussing the parable of the Prodigal Son, then looks at several approaches that have been used to unpack and understand the parables. Dr. Blomberg also walks through over a dozen different parables, exploring their interpretation and application to our daily lives.

*This class is not intended for credit towards any Denver Seminary degree program.

Don Payne, PhD - Associate Professor of Theology and Christian Formation

Dr. Payne is currently finishing a book on the doctrine of sanctification, to be published by Baker Academic. The core argument is that the already accomplished aspect of sanctification actually constitutes the defining and dominant aspect of sanctification. While it does not imply the completion or accomplishment of spiritual maturity in this life, accomplished sanctification actually serves as the dynamic and animating (not merely “positional”) work of God on which ongoing spiritual transformation depends. We can and must be transformed because we have been sanctified. The book will unfold what actually occurs in accomplished sanctification to make transformation possible and hopeful without being either antinomian or moralistic.
